

CERTIFICATE IN LAW ENFORCEMENT

KPT: N/861/3/0026 MQA: FA 9816

This course Security is defined as those means which serve to protect and preserve a society and allow for the conduct of activities within the organization or society without disruption. It consists of people, structures, systems and procedures. The need for security emanates from an aspect of fear which is a permanent feature in human behaviour due to the criminality and anarchism prevalent in our societies. Security is a feature of human interactions from the individual right up to the global level.

It is clear that the need for security training rests on our quest to increase security. This is intricately linked to the types of threats that prevail in a society. These could include threats to personal safety, personal property, organization assets and communal interests.
